A VOICE FOR WHISKY

The general counsel of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers association appeared before the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce the other day in opposition to the national pure food bill. His plea was based on the provisions relating to whisky. A straight whisky, said the learned gentleman, may be pure or impure, and a blended whisky may also be pure or impure. He did not believe the formulas for flavoring whisky should be given to the public because they have nothing whatever to do with the wholesomeness of the product.

Nobody wants to do any injustice to the wholesale dealers in liquor. Their business, destructive though it is to other business interests, is recognized by the law as a business. People cannot help however, viewing with suspicion the attitude of the liquor dealers. If whisky is ever wholesome it certainly will not be made less so by stringent laws to enforce purity in manufacture. Everybody knows that much, and perhaps most, of the whisky that is sold in saloons is impure.

A great deal of it contains injurious coloring matter, wood alcohol and other products calculated to ruin the constitution and impair the health. Pure whisky will, if indulged in excessively and continuously, ruin anybody quickly enough in all conscience. To add to it other stuff is a crime that should not be permitted if it is possible, by legal enactment, to forbid it. And perhaps the agitation over the whisky question will be first-rate thing for the country.

It may convince a good many toppers that they have been poisoning themselves and that they had better stop drinking it entirely. Such an outcome could not fail to be beneficial not only to the drinkers themselves, but to their friends, their families and the country generally.

A Frenchman is writing an imaginary history of a war between Germany and France in which the Kaiser is getting decidedly the worst of it. It will be remembered that the work is purely imaginative.

Those who have seen them say that the presents to Miss Roosevelt will not exceed $200,000 in value. Still there are few brides in the country who would not mind exchanging gifts with her.
